CONFECTIONS AND NOTIONS

Another business of long duration in the community is the old Heber Confectionary, now known as the "Crown Cafe." The business began on a small scale and was operated by A. E. Dayton for a few years. He then sold it to J. T. Murdock and S. J. Hylton who improved it and increased the business. Later, O. H. Hylton gained fame all over the state as an ice cream maker, and the business under his management grew with his renown. Add Averett took over the business, and the young people began referring to the store as "Add's." Mr. and Mrs. Lincoln Rasband now own and operate the business as "Crown Cafe." Its reputation for good ice cream has not diminished, and it is a favorite gathering place for young people.

Two stores located near the Central School were favorites of youngsters who attended that school. One was located on the corner where the Charles Bronson home now stands. Operated by Mrs. Annie McMillan, it was an outlet for candy and notions. School children would bring eggs to the store to exchange for candy. The other store was known as Clegg's Store, and was owned by Henry James Clegg. Starting as a small notions store, Mr. Clegg built the business into a general merchandise store. He always took time out to joke with or tease the youngsters who brought in their eggs or an occasional penny or nickel.

BAKERIES

The history of baking in Heber extends back to the earliest pioneer days when Sarah Bond, wife of Jessie Bond, baked delicious loaves of bread in her home and sold them to appreciative friends and neighbors throughout the valley for a nickel each. However, it was about 1919 before baking became an independent, permanent business in the city with the opening of a bakery in the Jeffs Building by Namaan Wilmore. Owen Hylton was also one of the early permanent bakers in the city. Mr. Hylton, a leading confectioner, baked bread in an oven at the rear of the Jeffs Building and then sold it over the counter in his confectionary shop a few doors north.

Mr. Wilmore, a native of Eureka, learned the baking business from his family, and established his business in Heber after serving in the Navy during World War I. He occupied the Jeffs Building for two years and then moved across the street from the Tabernacle.

In 1923 Teenie Duke bought the bakery from Mr. Wilmore and operated it until 1927 when she sold it to Walter Seiter, a 20-year-old immigrant from Germany, who had learned the trade in his native land. Mr. Seiter was called to serve a mission for the Church in 1930 in Germany and sold the bakery back to Mrs. Duke who operated it until he returned in 1932, and sold it back again to Mr. Seiter. He has expanded the business considerably since then and now operates it in a new building with modern equipment.

same village — and I used to tell the story that they grew up across the street from each other — but I thought I had better say down the street from each other. So now I can say without any reservation that Mom and Dad were born across the street, face to face, by the authority of Teodor Sirb."

Sirb's wife, "a beautiful Romanian lady" who reminded Sam of his mother, said that they had been praying for years that her husband's relatives in America would come and "today you've come!" They took off their shoes and ushered them into a tiny "special room" where they had a meal together. "They had sheep's cheese, a delicacy in Romania and pork rinds. They brought sliced tomatoes and a platter of bread. My cousin said with a smile on his face, 'The bread is much better now that the communists are gone.' They brought out what I would call 'shepherd's stew' like the stew I remember in Dushesne. It was a characteristic peasant dish and it was delicious. We had such a special time I just can't tell you. It was just overwhelming — the love we felt."

When they talked about the possibility of Sirb and his family coming to America, Sirb said that at his age it would be difficult for him to leave his people. "He paused and turned to his tall, erect, handsome 16-year-old son and said with tears in his eyes, 'Maybe my son. Maybe my son come to America.' And I thought if we could do something to bring him over it would be such a thrill."

After the meal, the Sams and their interpreter took emotional leave to rejoin the other judges in Bucharest. Sam had the feeling that many of the judges were "still somewhat suspicious of their new leaders who were former communists and wondered if the secret police patterned after the KGB might still be active."
